INFORMATION GOVERNANCE

GUIDE. GOVERN. PROTECT INFORMATION.

As the knowledge economy continues, information is now the most important asset for businesses. Companies with a proactive, and protective, information governance program in place create opportunities to maximise the value of all business information, ensure regulatory compliance and warrant opportunities to minimise risks in an increasingly security conscious global landscape.

WHAT YOU'LL STUDY

At Western Sydney University the continually changing information landscape has led to the development of our Master of Information Governance degree. The only course of its kind, the degree transforms you into a professional with cross-disciplinary knowledge of information governance, including an in-depth knowledge of the leading issues in business, law and computing.

The structure of the degree reflects the understanding that the technical, business and legal aspects of information governance are equally important, and that the related knowledge and skills from these areas are interconnected and applied in confluence in practice. The course draws from best practice to provide professionals with systematic knowledge and skills for managing information assets and ensuring regulatory compliance, in a way that is applicable across all industries and independent of any particular technology or vendor solution.

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

This course will provide you with the skills and knowledge to be a leader in information management and data security critical to the success of all industries. As a result our graduates will be sought after in a wide range of areas, creating many opportunities for career advancement.
