

Positionality question cards

At the beginning of the co-research process and throughout, reflect individually on these questions to critically examine the power dynamics between yourself and youth researchers. These questions could also be adapted to be used by youth researchers, if they are working in a team where power differentials between youth researchers may exist. Consider coming together as a team to discuss your reflections and document actions.

What power do I have? Where did I get this from?	In whose interests do I exercise this power?	How might my power influence the research project?	Am I relatable to the young people I will be working with?	What power do the young people hold in a research context?

Positionality question cards

Who am I to the young people I want to work with?

Who would we be together?

Are there power differentials? How might these shape the relationship between myself and young people involved in research?

Do young people I am working with see me as trustworthy or capable of earning trust?

How will I know how issues of power are impacting the process?
